

Inn it for the glory

Colonel Stockton,

We have all but driven the French from the field.

One small group remains near the Inn of Lien Con-Barnes.

Take what is left of your battalion, see what the French are up to and put a stop to it.

I have loaned you a squadron of Dragoons from Major General the Lord Edward Somerset's Brigade to help.

Arthur.

Objectives

The French are defending the inn and have a great deal of loot stored in its cellars.

They must defend the inn until the loot is loaded onto the wagons.

Once all the loot is on the wagons they need to escape down the road.

They gain a major victory if they escape with all wagons off the table edge via the road and the British cavalry are routed or reduced to less than half strength.

They gain a minor victory if they escape with all wagons off the table edge via the road and the British cavalry are still on the table and above half strength.

The British gain a major victory if all the wagons are captured.

The British gain a minor victory if they have over half of their cavalry on the field when one or more of the wagons escape.

Special Rules

Capturing the wagons:

The wagons are captured if they are defeated in melee.

The riders and draft animals can be targeted by musket fire.

All shots at the wagons suffer a -1 to their roll.

If they are hit twice they are unable to move until a friendly unit spends one turn in base to base contact with it.

Remove a base from the unit that spent the turn with the wagon, they are now driving the wagon.

Loading the wagons:

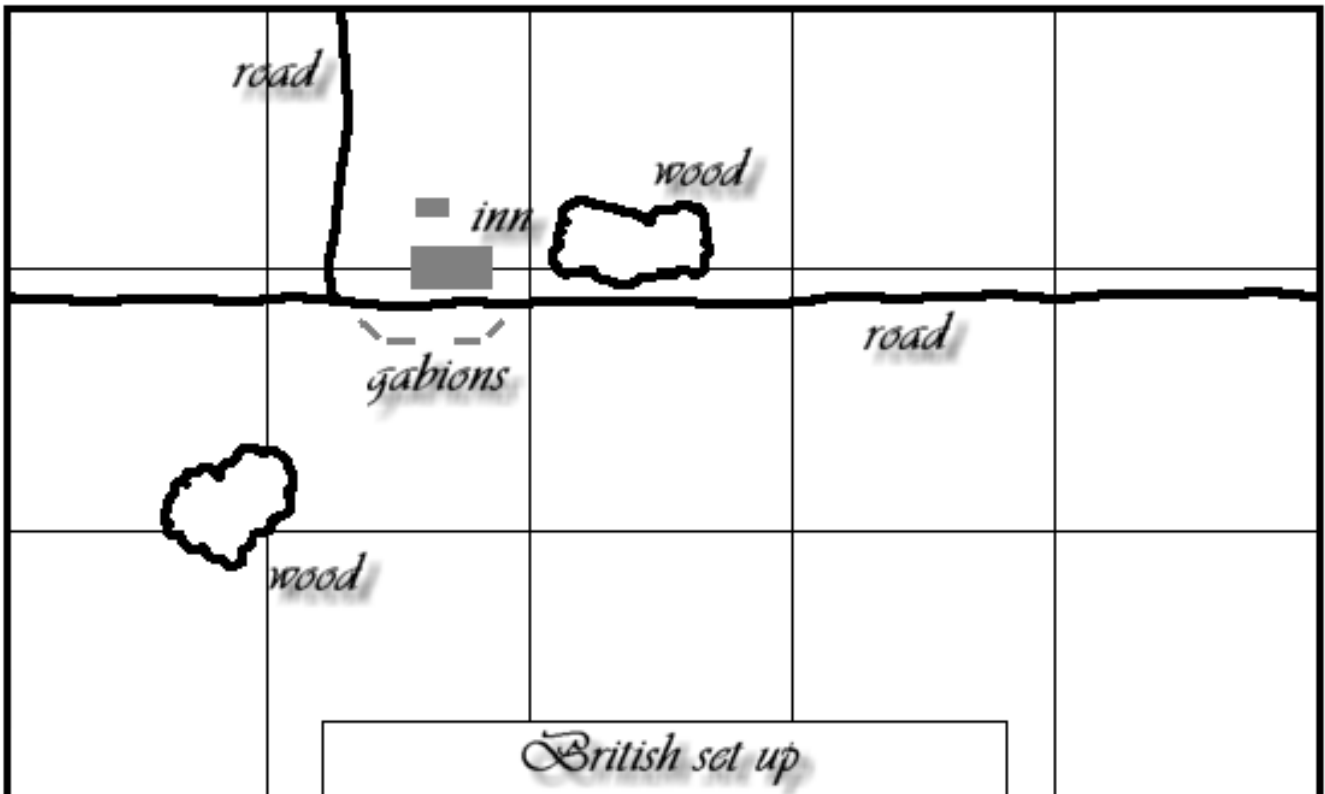

At the end of each French turn after the second roll a d6, on a 6 the wagon is loaded and ready to go, roll for each wagon separately.

The wagons have a melee of -2 and a move of 10cm

Set Up

The French must set up within 15cm of the inn.
The wagons must be in base to base contact with the rear of the inn in the yard area

The British may set up in the area shown.

The British have the initiative.
